

THE PICTURE OF DORIAN GRAY 79

The harmony of soul and body—how much that is! We ⁱⁿ ^{our} madness have separated the two, and have invented ^a ^{realism} that is vulgar, an idealism that is void. Harry! if you ^{only} knew what Dorian Gray is to me! You remember that ^{land-}scape of mine, for which Agnew offered me such a huge ^{price,} but which I would not part with? It is one of the best ^{things} I have ever done. And why is it so? Because, while ^I ^{was} painting it, Dorian Gray sat beside me. Some subtle ^{influence} passed from him to me, and for the first time in my ^{life} ^I ^{saw} in the plain woodland the wonder I had always looked ^{for,} and always missed."

"Basil, this is extraordinary! I must see Dorian Gray."

Hallward got up from the seat, and walked up ^{and} ^{down} the garden. After some time he came back. "Harry," ^{he} said, "Dorian Gray is to me simply a motive in art. You ^{might} see nothing in him. I see everything in him. He ^{is} ^{never} more present in my work than when no image of him ^{is} ^{there.} He is a suggestion, as I have said, of a new manner. ^I ^{find} him in the curves of certain lines, in the loveliness and ^{subtleties} of certain colours. That is all."

"Then why won't you exhibit his portrait?" asked Lord Henry.

"Because, without intending it, I have put into it ^{some} expression of all this curious artistic idolatry, of which, ^{of} course, I have never cared to speak to him. He ^{knows} ^{nothing} about it. He shall never know anything about it. But ^{the} world might guess it; and I will not bare my soul ^{to} ^{their} shallow prying eyes. My heart shall never be put under ^{their} microscope. There is too much of myself in the thing, ^{Harry} —too much of myself!"

"Poets are not so scrupulous as you are. They ^{know} ^{how} useful passion is for publication. Nowadays a broken ^{heart} will run to many editions."

"I hate them for it," cried Hallward. "An artist ^{should} create beautiful things, but should put nothing of his ^{own} ^{life} into them. We live in an age when men treat art as ^{if} ^{it} ^{were} meant to be a form of autobiography. We have lost ^{the} abstract sense of beauty. Some day I will show the ^{world} what it is; and for that reason the world shall never ^{see} ^{my} portrait of Dorian Gray."

"I think you are wrong, Basil, but I won't argue ^{with} ^{you.} It is only the intellectually lost who ever argue. Tell ^{me,} ^{is} Dorian Gray very fond of you ? "
